

"A Window Onto Something Real"*

(Updated June 2013)

Fiona Ritchie strolls along the main street of a small village in rural Scotland and steps through the plain doorway of an 18th century stone building. Passers-by would find it difficult to imagine what this simple gesture initiates: a weekly connection with devoted public radio listeners throughout the United States. Broadcasting each week for over three decades, Ritchie's radio program The Thistle & Shamrock has become one of NPR's most widely heard and best-loved music programs. She has entered the lives of millions of Americans by way of an inconspicuous studio door, thousands of miles away in Scotland.

Ritchie came full circle to re-settle and create her radio programs at home in Scotland some years ago. Along the way she has forged a strong association with the United States, her adopted homeland, and made a unique contribution to the American airwaves.

Born in Greenock, Scotland, in 1960, Ritchie spent her childhood in nearby Gourock, a coastal town on the banks of the busy River Clyde on the country's west coast. In a household where the strains of the BBC's "Home Service" soundtracked her early memories, Ritchie developed an appreciation for music and a love of radio. Her mother's passion for the songs of Robert Burns, and Ritchie's participation in a prominent youth choir nurtured a particular interest in folk music of the British Isles. In 1977, she entered Scotland's University of Stirling to embark upon a course of study in Scottish and English literature, and was later drawn to psychology as her major area of study.

Three years later, Ritchie accepted a six-month position in the U.S. as a teaching assistant in the psychology department of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. She returned to Stirling and graduated in 1981 with honors in psychology. That same year, Ritchie went back to Charlotte and soon joined the team at new NPR member station WFAE-FM.

By the end of the year, she had debuted on the air with the earliest version of The Thistle & Shamrock, featuring music drawn from a small number of vinyl albums that reminded her of home. In 1982 Ritchie was appointed WFAE's Director of Promotion and Development. In 1983 The Thistle & Shamrock, already a weekly WFAE offering, began national distribution; Ritchie became full time producer and host of the show in 1986.

During her stay in North Carolina, Ritchie maintained a base in Scotland and travelled throughout Britain and Ireland to keep in touch with musical developments and contacts. She also visited radio stations coast-to-coast across the US, presenting live broadcasts and events, and in 1989 and 1990, travelled to 22 U.S. cities with The Thistle & Shamrock Concert Tour. This showcase of singers and instrumentalists was presented in association with Dunkeld Records Scotland.

In the summer of 1990, Ritchie moved program production to the musical hub of Edinburgh, Scotland. Since then, the mother of two has re-located with her family to Perthshire, another landscape steeped in traditional music and a destination for travelling musicians from around the world. On return trips to the United States, Ritchie has visited and raised funds for NPR member stations from Louisiana to Alaska, and hosted festival concerts from Wolf Trap Center for the Performing Arts to Chicago's Grant Park. She acts in a voluntary capacity for arts organisations in the US and UK.

Ritchie's awards include six World Medals from the New York Festivals ' International Competition for Radio Programming, and a Flora Macdonald award from St. Andrew's University \(NC\)

, which also conferred upon her the degree of honorary doctorate. In 2014 she was awarded an MBE (Member of the Order of the British Empire) in the Queen's Birthday Honours list for Services to Broadcasting and Traditional Music. Hundreds of Thistle & Shamrock program tapes and vinyl albums, along with concert recordings, playlists, newsletters, and related materials are now part of a working archive in the Scottish Heritage Center at St. Andrews University (NC). The archive is open to anyone interested in studying the rich heritage of Celtic music and how it has been explored on the radio.

Fiona Ritchie has presented numerous programs for BBC Radio Scotland and BBC Radio 2, launching the Radio Scotland world music series “Celtic Connections” in 1993. She has produced and presented many live concert performances and broadcasts, including a musical event for HRH Prince Charles in 2001 at Holyrood Palace in Edinburgh, and has acted in an advisory capacity for arts organizations in the U.S. and U.K., including serving on the Scottish advisory committee for the British Council

. In 2003 Ritchie served as advisor to the Smithsonian Folklife Festival

, and the Smithsonian Institution Center for Folklife and Cultural Heritage

honoured her for “creating an on-air community, serving as a musical ambassador, and connecting listeners with the best of traditional and contemporary artistry.” 2003 also saw Ritchie offer NPR’s first mp3 free music download in a specially commissioned recording from Scottish singer/songwriter

Dougie MacLean

, and in 2006 she launched “Thistlepod,” a free podcast from NPR featuring new-releases from Celtic roots. In 2012, Fiona launched

ThistleRadio

, a 24/7 web-based music channel devoted to new and classic music from Celtic roots. She has also produced several CD compilations, and authored a volume on Celtic music for the NPR Curious Listener’s Guide book series, published in 2005 by Perigree Books.

In 2014, UNC Press published “Wayfaring Strangers ~ The Musical Voyage from Scotland and Ulster to Appalachia”, co-authored by Fiona Ritchie and Doug Orr with a Foreword by

Dolly Parton

. “Wayfaring Strangers” has been a critical success, spending a month on the New York Times Best Seller list and winning the 2015

Thomas Wolfe Literary Award

. The book has been featured at the Edinburgh International Book Festival

, Nashville’s

Southern Festival of Books

and in a presentation at the Library of Congress

in Washington, DC. It has also inspired concerts at the

Celtic Connections

Festival and TradFest

Fiona Ritchie maintains an office in Charlotte, NC and an active involvement with the the state’s Swannanoa Gathering summer folk arts workshops since their founding in 1991. She is a founder member of Just Singin' community choir and sits on the Board of Directors of the Gordon Duncan Memorial Trust. Ritchie enjoys playing clawhammer banjo, a pursuit she especially embraced during long writing days at work on "Wayfaring Strangers".
